

Environmental Engineering

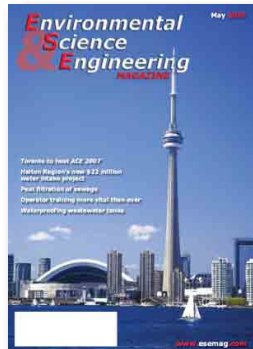

Every developed and thriving society has to deal with minimizing pollution and ecological hazards. From treating superfund sites to maintaining wastewater treatment plants to countering the effects of air pollution, environmental engineering is a crucial function. Professionals in this role need to understand a broad range of issues such as law, environmental chemistry, and ecological influencers. Our complex environment requires the most knowledgeable and talented engineers to deal with the various factors of keeping our world safe and clean - factors like acid rain, wastewater, irrigation, wetlands, flora & fauna, and even noise. It is increasingly important to find the right people for this vital job.

The Ropella Environmental Engineering Team understands the unique recruitment challenges faced by this wide-ranging industry. Our understanding of your company, your customers and current industry trends means we can find just the right fit, quickly and efficiently. Our Executive Search Consultants are likely members of the same trade associations and attend the same events as you and potential candidates for your company.

We have proven our ability to help companies grow and prosper by developing their most important competitive advantage - talented people. You can count on us to find the right talent to drive your business forward.
